LITTLE LETTERS

F MORE WEIGHT than anything we could say about the merits of THE CENTURY DICTIONARY & CYCLOPEDIA & ATLAS are these letters from the thinkers, the readers and the people prominent in the affairs of the country. These printed here have been chosen almost at random, and are but fair samples of the hundreds being received daily from those of our subscribers who have had their books long enough to have acquired the "Century habit." College Presidents, Artisans, Linguists, Mechanics, have here united in praise of the greatest reference work of all time, "the authority of authorities." Each of the classes praises this many-sided working library from its own view-point. Economists, too, have their word to say about the half-price and the little monthly payments—potent factors in this "million dollar sale of 'The Century'" at The Wanamaker Store.

Add your name to this list of Century owners. One day's delay deprives you of that day's services of the most capable helper you can have in your library or your office. It has been well said that "six months of consultation with 'The Century'—if only on the common things of daily life—is a liberal education." Every day brings its own questions—answered instantly with these volumes by your desk-side.

With a dollar to spend and 10c. a day to spare (for awhile), you can own this great work now & & &
